NOTE FOR: Mr. Taylor

SUBJECT : Response to DDA Exchange Editorial Board

1. The Editorial Board of the "DDA Exchange" has directed a number of questions to the DDCI, with the intention that these questions and his answers will form the meat of an article to appear in the next issue of the "Exchange." The DDCI has asked for our assistance in responding to Question # 11, which follows:

11. Do you foresee the Agency performing a larger role in providing services of common concern to the Intelligence Community, particularly in such areas as training, research and development and the supply of technical devices?

2. Would you give me your thoughts on this by telephone before the end of the day, and I will put an answer together.

Frank -

Based on my limited knowledge in this area I would think the answer is "yes." Here we not traditionally played a lead role in the latter two areas?

I think we have the expertise to play the larger role but maybe we should mention a concern about needing adequate funds and manpower to do so.
